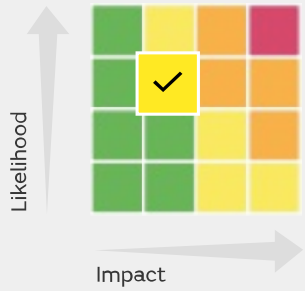
Further details

An area of rain moving into Northern Ireland during Sunday night turns to sleet and snow during the early hours of Monday before turning back to rain again from the south during the course of the morning. The bulk of accumulations will be above 100 to 200 metres with a chance that above 200 metres some places may see 5 to 10 cm snow. At lower levels, snow cover will be patchier with small temporary accumulations and slushy deposits.

During the afternoon, strong winds may then lead to some drifting of lying snow over hills and mountains.



Medium likelihood of low impacts
